ABSTRACT

Objects of interest may be segmented from digital medical images, and the orientation of such objects of interest may be determined. Masking techniques may be used to create object masks based on the images, based on which rough images may be generated. The rough images may be processed to segment the objects of interest from the images and/or to determine the orientations of the objects of interest.